The alleged Mexican trailor Lopez has written a letter to the editor of the New York Times, denying that he betrayed Maximilian at Quereland. He declares the story of his treason was first counseled by two Imperialist generals, the of whom desired to conceal his guilty speculations, which led the army to rain, while the other was moved by motives of reveage. These officers, he says, knowing he had left his post by onler of Maximillan to parky with the enemy, sought in the incident a pretext to hide their own misdeeds by an accasation of treason on his wart. He about severates that the Emperor was not taken prisoner in the besieged city but at some distance beyond the town, at the head of his treeps, among which were 400 good cavalymen of the Emperor's regiment, drawn up in the of battle and surrounded by their Generals and officers.
